MAKING THEM AMERICANS

How few of us realize the importance of making over the foreigner—of implanting American ideals, ideas and common sense in place of socialistic and maybe anarchistic theories. It means a lot to every American citizen. This work and many other interesting activities of the Department of Labor are discussed in the twelfth issue of the series of beautifully illustrated booklets on Our Government which we have been distributing to representative citizens of this community.

If by any chance you have failed to receive regularly your copies of this series that has been so favorably commented upon, visit us today and from the limited supply on hand we will gladly complete your set.

Light Plant Burns

Monday night about 10:30 the cry of fire was heard and soon a large crowd gathered at the Appomattox Power & Light Co, which is owned and operated by M. L. Earman, and which was wrapped in flames. The building was a crude affair, of frame construction and with a stiff breeze from northeast soon went down Explosions of oil containers and popping of boiler afforded excitement for the crowd as it gathered. Earlier in the evening the boiler was fired up, but the lights went out in a short while and the town was in darkness until the burning building and oils lit up the community. Just how the fire originated no one seems to know. Mr. Earman left the plant it is said in a safe condition thirty minutes before the alarm of fire was sounded and he can offer no theory as to how it started.

He started a lighting plant here about six years ago on a small scale and gradually grew up with the town, until at the time of the fire it was entirely unfitted for the public service and requirements of the fast growing town, which he endeavored to serve. Interested citizens were engaged with him in his effort to increase the power of his plant and give the town adequate service and plans were maturing it is said for adequate equipment. Just what turn the town will take now is not known, except that it is believed Appomattox will have a better light plant within 60 days.

The loss sustained by Mr Earman is said to be heavy, although he claims that he was 80 per cent insured on his building and machinery. The insurance is $5,300 and the loss is estimated to be more than $6,000.

The Co-Ops End a Record Year

It took all three warehouses here to handle the tobacco last week, and arrangements to take care of increased receipts this week. About 300,000 pounds were handled by the Association and farmers report that they are highly pleased with the business way and fair method of handling the crop All the warehouses close today and will open again on January 2nd. Prices are being maintained and association members do not feel the need of rushing to market as in former days.

As the market closes here today all available space is filled with the weed. The association is handling about 75,000 pounds daily, and the big rush is being worked up as fast as possible. Supervisor of graders Tuggle, was here yesterday and today and reports all the markets east of here blocked by the great offerings Many farmers could not get into either warehouse here yesterday and a few had to take their loads back home and will come again. Not having lights the warehouses could no clean up daily and there is a great accumulation on hand. Reports from Lynchburg say that the market there is glutted.

Cooperative marketing rides to the close of 1922 on the flood ide of success.

Nation-wide recognition of the benefits of cooperative associations which include a half a million farmers was voiced last week in the Washington Conference of cooperatives from all sections of the United States. Carl Williams, President of the American Cotton Growers Exchange declared this conference the most important move in American history for the benefit of the farmer.

President Harding, Secretary Herbert Hoover, Senator Capper and Eugene Meyer, director of the War Finance Corporation, paid tribute to the work of the cooperative associations.

Following last week's second payment by the North Carolina Cotton Association, members of the Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association throughout Eastern North Carolina doubled their cash receipts this week on all tobacco delivered by December first to the Association. A second payment to all members of the Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association in the old belt will follow on all deliveries made up to December 20th as soon thereafter as checks can be made out and distributed.

A third cash payment to the organized growers of South Carolina will be distributed after Association members in Virginia and Western North Carolina have doubled their money on all deliveries for 1922.

With larger crops this year than last, tobacco farmers in three states have received more for their tobacco than in 1921.

In North Carolina and Virginia November sales have shown a gain of $3 per hundred while the South Carolina growers have practically doubled last year's prices

With the orderly marketing of both tobacco and cotton by thousands of farmers through their cooperative associations in the Carolinas and Virginia the tide of prosperity is rising as the growers adopt and use the methods of big business to successfully sell their products.

Great Progress, But Inequalities in Educational Opportunities Still Marked. Fourth Lesson In Virginia Government And Citizenship.

(By JNO. GARLAND POLLARD.)

HARRIS HART

The College of William and Mary is offering to our readers free tuition in its correspondence course in Virginia Government and Citizenship. Men and women of all ages may be enrolled by sending their names to Box 265, Williamsburg, Va.

A survey of the public school system of Virginia brings to light two outstanding facts, one immensely encouraging and the other sadly regrettable.

The encouraging feature is the rapidly enhancing appreciation of the value of an education, as shown by the recent marked increase in school enrollment. In the last two years the number of pupils has grown more rapidly than in the preceding five years, and last session found 545,669 pupils in the schools. The growth in school enrollment is greatly in excess of the growth in population.

The regrettable fact is the inequality in educational opportunities afforded by the several counties of the State. While the schools in some of the counties and cities compare favorably with those anywhere in the United States, there are a number of counties whose school term is less than 130 days, and in which there are no high schools. Virginians believe in local self government, but few will carry the doctrine so far as to hold that any county, whether through poverty or indifference, should be permitted to withhold from its children fair educational opportunities.

It is admittedly difficult to apply any infallible test as to the efficiency of a school, yet the best thought on the subject has determined that the fairest way known to test the efficiency of a school system, is to consider ten certain factors, none of them controlling in themselves, but when taken together furnish a fairly safe guide. Five of these factors are educational and five are financial—for good schools cost money. The financial factors are fixed on the theory that proper instruction cannot be furnished at a cost less than $33.33 per pupil. As to the educational factors, it is believed that it is fair to say that 85% of the school population that should be in daily attendance; that all the teachers should have at least a first grade certificate; that the school term should be at least 160 days, and the number of high school pupils ought to be equal to 10% of the total enrollment; and that the seventh grade enrollment should be equal to 10% of the pupils in all elementary grades. Judged by this standard, there are eleven counties in the State which are less than 50% efficient, and strange to say, some of the richest counties in the State have the poorest school system, while on the other hand a number of the poorest counties of the State rank high on the efficiency list.

Sentenced To Die?

Two thousand years ago the shepherds on the hills of Bethlehem gathered their cloaks around their shoulders as the first icy blasts of winter scourged the earth. A little family sought the shelter of a barn and here the Christ Child was born. There in the Holy Land He lived, was persecuted and died upon the Cross for you and me.

Today amid the ruins of their homes thousands of Christian children face death through hunger, cold and persecution because they are followers of the Child of Bethlehem. Living on roots and herbs thousands like those above are dying rather than betray their Christ. They will die if America does not send them food and clothing and protection.

While our children count their toys on Christmas Morn, scores of children in Armenia will stand barefoot in the snow before Near East Relief orphanages, begging for a crust of bread. Many will die this winter unless America saves them.

Sixty dollars sent to Waller Holladay, Treasurer, Near East Relief, 30 American National Bank Building, Richmond, will keep one of these miserable babies for twelve months.

America's task is to care for 115,000 children. Virginia's quota is 5,000 of this number. Shall we reach our quota?

America alone stands between these children and death. A few dollars means a life. Will you sentence them to die?
